RULE 25-B

MEDIATION

Mediation is a process of resolving disputes by the agreement of the parties with the assistance of an objective and impartial third party. The mediator generally does not recommend a settlement, but rather facilitates negotiations and communications between the parties until a mutually acceptable settlement of their differences is obtained, or until an impasse is evident. The mediator will guide the discussions and help clarify the issues. Private caucuses may be held between the mediator and each party in an attempt to bring disputes closer together.

If the allocation of parental rights and responsibilities is an issue, then at any time after service of summons in an action for divorce, annulment, or legal separation, or at any time after filing of a post decree motion to modify the allocation of parental rights and responsibilities, the Court may order both parties to participate in mediation for a period of time not to exceed ninety (90) days. If the Court directs the parties to mediation, then all parties are required to participate in mediation on a good faith basis. The parties may agree to mediate issues other than the allocation of parental rights and responsibilities and related matters.

The cost of mediation shall be the initial subject of mediation, and shall be paid by the parties pursuant to their fee agreement with the mediator.

The mediator shall notify the Court upon the conclusion of mediation.
